

IS THE EPA LISTENING?

EPA says it wants to listen to what Americans say about its anti-coal regulations — Americans who live in Boston, New York, Denver, Seattle, San Francisco and Washington, DC.

But EPA isn't listening to Americans in coal and manufacturing communities, where the families and businesses that will be hurt most by its regulations actually live.

We held our own hearing right here in Washington. 5,000 coal miners and their families showed up. 38 Members of the US House and Senate spoke. Representatives from business and labor rallied the crowd.

Here's what they told EPA:

- Let workers keep their jobs.
- Let households and businesses keep affordable electricity.
- Let the world's number one coal country keep coal in our future.

Americans count on coal for affordable electricity and employment. They're telling EPA what they think about its reckless regulations.

Will the EPA listen to them?

Paid for by Count on Coal.

For more information, visit our website at www.countoncoal.org

COUNT
ON COAL